AMERICAN GENEALOGICAL PERIODICALS

By Constance K. Olson, Ann Arbor, Michigan

American genealogical periodicals have been with us for nearly a century and a half, and contemplating the wealth of information that is contained in them is a mind-boggling effort. It is generally agreed that the New England Historic Genealogical Register was the first genealogical periodical in this country. It appeared in January of 1847 and is still going strong. Prior to its debut, genealogical material had been published in periodicals but it was usually part of some historical journal and wasn't labeled "genealogy." In contrast to the lonely beginning of the Register in 1847, there are now- if a very broad definition of the term is used- over one thousand genealogical periodicals in existence. However, two or three hundred is probably a more realistic number for those that deserve serious consideration.

The variety of information that can be found in these publications is almost endless. In addition to compiled genealogies, one might find cemetery or church records, tax lists, vital records, abstracts of wills, Bible records, how-to articles for a specific subject or locality, names and addresses of genealogical and historical societies, corrections and criticisms of previously published material, book reviews, maps, historical background for a locality or an event, queries and bibliographies. This list of potential subject matter is not meant to be all inclusive, and, of course, no single publication would contain material relating to all of these subjects. Each publication tends to have a particular focus. Also, the quality of the material varies greatly from one publication to another. Although some periodicals have established a good reputation for maintaining high standards, the old adage, "don't believe everything you read," holds true and one must always evaluate the evidence.

Once aware of the wealth of available material, the researcher must decide which publication to investigate and how to find the desired information. Most genealogical periodicals are published by genealogical organizations and the interests of the organization determine the scope of the publication. There are a few periodicals which are privately published and the individual involved determines the focus. For purposes of this discussion, periodicals will be divided into four groups according to their primary area of interest: general or national, regional, local and special. There is also a group of defunct publications and it would be easy to ignore them, but the fact that they are no longer being published does not lessen the value of the information contained therein.

A key for finding a useful periodical might be a publication that lists genealogical periodicals. Prior to 1992, Everton's Genealogical Helper listed genealogical societies and their publications by location in the July-August issue. Currently the January-February issue features a "Directory of Locality Publications" and the March-April issue lists family/surname publications. Regular features of Heritage Quest, published in Orting, Washington, include a periodical directory and a review of periodicals. A check-list of then current American genealogical periodicals appeared in the October 1962 issue of The American Genealogist. Two bibliographies are Lester J. Cappon's

American Genealogical Periodicals: A Bibliography with a Chronological Finding-List and Directory of Genealogical Periodicals by J. Konrad. Cappon gives a brief discussion of the historical background of periodicals and then lists about 160 titles, excluding those published by patriotic societies and those relating to specific surnames. A good overview of genealogical periodicals is Kip Sperry's A Survey of American Genealogical Periodicals and Periodical Indexes. He discusses genealogical research and periodical literature in addition to describing several indexes and providing a list of periodicals. Libraries with a good genealogical collection will probably have most of these reference works.

There are a number of indexes which can aid the researcher in finding the appropriate information. Like the periodicals, they vary in scope and quality, but any index is usually better than no index. There is almost as much to know about indexes as there is about the periodicals. Indexes can be cumulative or annual, surname or every-name, locality or subject-only. There are those for individual publications and those for multiple publications. For early publications, the 1900 edition of Munsell's Index to American Genealogies is helpful, although it is a surname-only index and covers primarily town and county histories with only a small number of periodical references. For periodicals published between 1870 and 1952, the three volume Index to Genealogical Periodicals by Donald L. Jacobus is a good reference. A one volume reprint of this work is also available. Since 1962 the Genealogical Periodical Annual Index (GPAI) has been the major source for locating material in genealogical periodicals. A fairly recent competitor for GPAI is the Periodical Source Index (PERSI) produced by the Allen County (Indiana) Public Library Genealogy Department. It covers over 1000 periodicals compared with GPAI's 260, and is available in hard copy and on fiche. The above indexes may be found in Lansing at the Library of Michigan.

Once a periodical has been identified or a specific reference has been found in an index, there is the problem of locating the actual publication. Because of the vast number of periodicals, few libraries can afford either the cost or the space to carry a majority of them. In most cases, searching the catalog and/or the shelves may be the only way to determine what the holdings of a particular library are. If there is a published guide for the library, it may list the periodicals. Such is the case for the recently published A Genealogical Guide to the Burton Historical Collection by Joseph Oldenburg.

Formidable as the task may be, it is well worth the time and effort to investigate the treasures hiding in the pages of genealogical periodicals. In the past few years the Genealogical Publishing Company of Baltimore has published several books that give the genealogists access to information from periodicals. These include individual volumes of periodical literature relating to New England, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and Kentucky. Thus many thousands of names that might otherwise have been undiscovered, have been made available in an easy to use format. Also some early, difficult-to-find periodicals have been reprinted. With all of these recent developments, and the potential for computerizing genealogical literature, the outlook for making use of all the information in genealogical periodicals is becoming brighter all the time.
